Keran Wicks - Managing Director

Keran Wicks is the founder and Managing Director of Network Video one of the leading players in Australia's $1 billion DVD rental / retail industry with over 400 stores in her group. Keran has lived the industry since the days of Beta, membership fees and deposits. In short: Keran is self-made, straight-talking, opinionated and very hard working.

Born in 1960 in Sydney but raised in Melbourne, Keran left school at 13 because she "just sucked at it". Never a dawdler, she immediately worked pumping petrol while planning her business empire.

At 15, Keran lied about her age to get a job as a salesgirl at the swanky women's boutique The Inn Shoppe (back when pinstripe suits for women were all the rage). Six months later she was made manager of Garfunkle's in Moonee Ponds, Victoria and soon after started doing the buying and helping with designs. By age 18, Keran was running all of their four stores. Before she left at age 22, she'd opened another six stores for them while at the same time DJ-ing at Melbourne clubs at night and doing the odd bit of parade modeling.

At 24, Keran gave birth to her first son Paul. The next year she started Moviesearch, her first business wholesaling movies to video stores from the back of her car. By 27 she had her own warehouse.

Second son Chris came along when Keran was aged 31. The next year there was another addition to the family - her first video store in Cotham Road Kew. 'Little Monster Video' was named for her energetic son. Meanwhile the wholesale business continued to grow.

With an obvious talent for business building Keran founded Network Video aged 33, making her the only woman to head any video rental group, franchise or independent, in the world.

As head of Australia's largest independent marketing and buying group Keran travels constantly, speaking to groups of retailers and studio heads, ranging from 10 to 500 at a time. In 2001, she was the only Australian and the only woman to present at a major international conference put on by 20th Century Fox in the US. Keran showcased her award-winning 'Videology' campaign.

Keran has been an active member of the Australian Video Rental Retailers Association (AVRRA) board since 1998 and held the post of Vice-President five times between 1998 and 2004. She was a key driver in the successful case brought against Warner Bros in the Australian Federal Court in 2001. More recently Keran helped take the fight up to Foxtel.

Keran Wicks lives in Melbourne with her two sons and a deaf brown dog named Sable after the female wrestler.
